The Old Police Station is one of the Isle of Man's most recognisable and historically significant buildings, occupying a prominent position in the heart of Castletown, just moments from the Market Square and the magnificent Castle Rushen. Designed by the internationally renowned Arts & Crafts architect Mackay Hugh Baillie Scott and constructed between 1899 and 1901, this exceptional Registered Building offers a rare opportunity to acquire an important piece of Manx history.

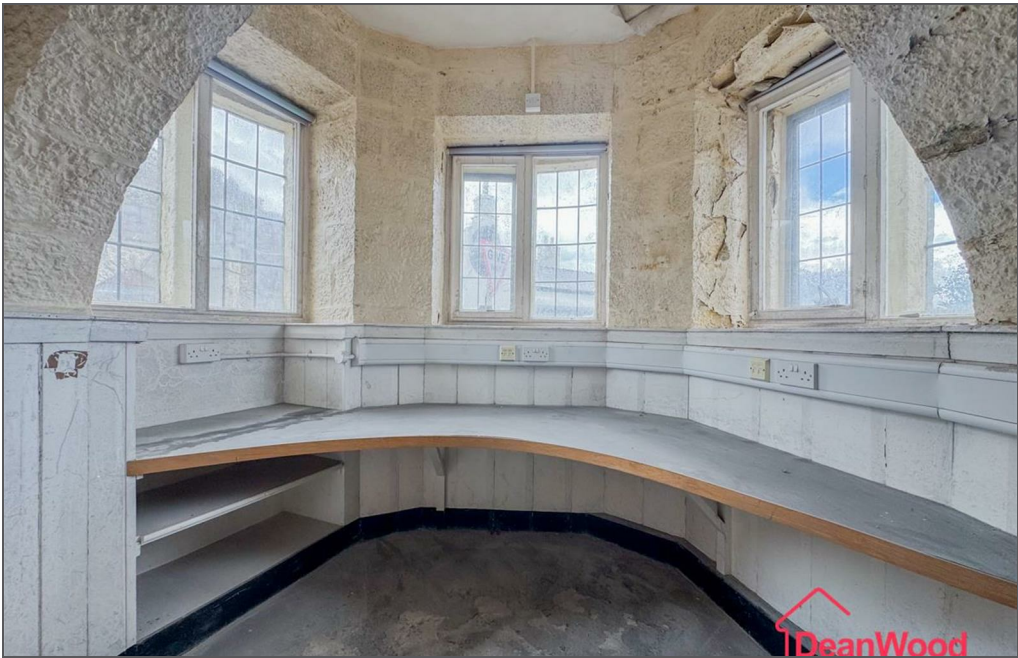

Originally built as Castletown's police headquarters, the property remained in operational use until 2017 and still retains many of its fascinating original features, including the Victorian police cells. Constructed using local stone and showcasing the craftsmanship synonymous with Baillie Scott's work, the building is rich in architectural character and period detail throughout.

Now offered for sale, The Old Police Station presents an exciting opportunity for restoration, redevelopment or continued use, subject to the necessary planning permissions and statutory consents. Whether envisaged as a unique commercial venture, cultural destination, hospitality project or another sympathetic use, the possibilities are extensive whilst respecting the building's historic importance.

Opportunities to purchase a landmark of this calibre are exceptionally rare. Combining outstanding heritage, a prime location and significant potential, The Old Police Station offers the chance to become the custodian of one of Castletown's most iconic buildings and help shape its next chapter.
